Foreword

THE basis of all business is its legality. The guide and protection of the industries and of the social activities of a community are its lawyers and its judges. No enterprise is initiated, no industry endures, that is not piloted by the directing thought of its legal advisors. Likewise, no commercial activity continues, no economic nor social relations are perpetuated, and no governmental function is operative that is not secured in its rights by the interpretive intelligence of the magistrate. Justice and security are the ideal to which is dedicated the dignified and essential profession of the law.

In this era of driving energies and sometimes indiscriminate conclusion, there may be misconception by the laity of the motive and method of the lawyer. In fairness to him, let it be understood that it is not the object of the lawyer to create differences and litigation from which he may receive parasitical profit, but rather it is his bounden duty, and so acknowledged by him, to keep his clients out of court and to act as the conscientious arbiter of their differences. To him is it given, more than to any other, to serve as the proponent of peaceful and constructive endeavor, and not as the fomenter of friction in human relationships. He seeks the court of justice only as a last resort for adjustment, by the impartial agency of the jurist, of differences beyond his ability to control because of his natural and necessary partisanship.

While it is the exalted province of the counsellor to guide the ship of enterprise safely through the shoals and stresses of antagonistic forces, as it is the function of the judge to uphold the bulwark of the law against predatory encroachment and anarchy, the lawyer occupies a still higher position in the adjustment of the more intimate human relationships. In chancery, as well as law, lawyer and jurist both are truly worthy bearers of balm and carriers of oil for troubled waters.

The lawyer is human; he is faithful to his trust; he is of a type that strives for accomplishment, and he is possessed of impulse attuned to creative effort and given vast understanding by laborious preparation and applied experience. He is sincere; he is imbued with the broader philosophies of life; and, to the lawyer, though he seeks practical means, we must be fair, as he is fair to client, his work, himself and his opponent.

Mindful of these high qualities in the mind and motive of lawyer and judge, weighed in the estimation of us whose daily occupation brings us in almost constant contact with them, where observation is enhanced by the sidelights as well as the highlights of their characters, we, the editors, present, as conscientiously as may be, these representative members of that host whose professional services are salutary, whose labors exceed their reward, and whose ideals are the highest, the Bench and Bar of Illinois.

By LE ROY HENNESSEY.

The Lawyer

HE life, services, and death of the ablest and best of the legal profession are ordinarily, and too often, left without any record more enduring than the recollection of their colleagues at the bar, or on the bench, than which nothing is more ephemeral. In other professions and callings the record of its foremost men is written in such ways and characters as serve to attract the attention of the masses, and make them temporarily, or for all time, seen and known of men. For the military hero the whole world is making and inscribing a record, while the government which he has served feels bound to honor his memory with monuments of brass or marble that transmit his name and deeds to posterity. The artist leaves the creation of his genius in lines and colors that hand down his name and genius to remote generations. The minister speaks from year to year—now before some great assembly of laymen, now before synod, presbytery or conference, and the measured utterances that befit the occasion are as surely and correctly taken and reduced to print as they are heard by his auditors. The physician, whether as a specialist or a general practitioner, by years of study, experience and ability, becomes an authority, and the record of his experience and his dissertations fill the pages of the medical journals, and his name and fame exist in records more enduring than brass. The statesman, whether real or fancied—provided only that he holds a place supposed to belong to statesmen—leaves a record, not alone in the legislative journals, but also in the memory of ten thousand partisan admirers, and on the pages of a thousand newspapers, whose columns will be filled with the record of his life and exaggerated accounts of his deeds, from the day of his birth to that of his death.

Not so with the lawyer who, during a life longer or shorter, has been “only a lawyer.” His achievements and victories are won, not by accident, or by stirring words, or emotional appeals; not by arguments addressed to friendly minds and sympathetic listeners, as is the case, in many instances, in political warfare, on the stump or in the halls of legislation. Neither have such efforts been the result of deliberate and careful preparation in the library, like those of the statesman, who is allowed his own time, both to prepare and to deliver what he will say. Unlike all of these, the lawyer usually finds himself bound to make his greatest and best efforts amid, or at the close, perhaps, of a lengthy or exhaustive trial, in which he must attempt, at least, to apply great fundamental legal principles to a new state of facts—facts which are constantly varying from hour to hour, thus rendering the exercise of all his powers of discrimination and reasoning, in the highest degree, immediate and necessary. He is thus called upon to take sides, and give a reason for opinions that must be formed and enforced on the spur of the moment and without delay or deliberation, and this he must do, not only thus hastily and without the deliberation that is allowed in every other calling, but in the face of, not a listening and applauding multitude, but in the presence of half a dozen lawyers, all of whom are watching, like the ancient warrior watched, for some vulnerable place, even though it be in the heel of his argument, for an opportunity to assail him, and all this, perhaps, under the depression of feeling arising from the fact that he knows both court and counsel are against him, and, however able his argument, it will be remembered only by the one, while he attempts to demolish it by authority, if he can, or rail at it as illogical and inconclusive if he cannot, while the "court" will recall it only while the matter is under advisement. In efforts before a jury, and in appeals addressed to it, it is still worse; for then not only must he appear without preparation and at the end of a tedious and tiresome trial, but if, as is here supposed, he is a lawyer, and not a legal kite, he is restricted to a discussion of certain facts in evidence, and from which, as a lawyer, he will not seek to depart, and also by the effect which the court gives of the law of such facts; and here, too, the record he makes is as fleeting as the facts and the wandering vagaries of the jury before whom he discusses them—a record remembered for an hour and then forgotten forever. Thus the small audience, the interests of opposing counsel, and the fact that the court who decides against one never thinks much of the effort of the one it holds against, and the further fact that, in the nature of the case, no record of such effort is possible, place the lawyer at a disadvantage under which no other profession or calling rests, so far as his record is concerned.

In the printed arguments which are addressed to the appellate courts, the case is but little better, since they are buried in the files of the court, read only by the counsel on the other side, and the court, and by it often not understandingly, and without sufficient attention to the facts to follow the argument, much less to give it the credit and weight which it deserves. So, while the judgment of the court on what the law is, is recorded, the argument of the lawyer as to what it should be, is recalled only to be forgotten.

Without disparagement to either of the other professions, or to the ability, or pretenses to ability, or to the character of those who are more strictly deemed public men, it must be admitted that the evidence of character and ability afforded by a reputation as a lawyer in the front rank of his profession, is, beyond all question, superior to that which is offered by the holding of any mere public position or which office ever has, or in and of itself ever can afford. Nor is there in any other calling or profession so sure or accurate a measure afforded, by which any one may be tried and tested, as in this. The quack in medicine may meet with wondrous success; the minister of the Rev. Charles Honeyman's type exists not alone in fiction; the statesman, or rather the supposed statesman, since he is where a statesman ought to be, may be destitute alike of character and ability, or, if possessed of either, only in a very limited degree—the creature of circumstances or of accidents, a partisan, the creature of a compromise, perhaps, between a level-headed man and a lunatic, whose only qualification was his availability or his wealth. But the lawyer who contents himself with being a lawyer, who neither desires nor seeks anything else than that, and who, thus seeking, attains a standing at the head of his profession, reaches that place, not by accident or by wealth, or by the fostering care of interested partisans, but by reason, and by reason alone, of a combination of great ability, untiring industry and fair moral character, truthfulness and honesty. No man has attained, and no man ever “will” attain, to such a place, who has not all of these in more than ordinary measure. No lawyer has ever made a reputation as such, by mere “smartness,” much less by trickery, untruthfulness or dishonesty, and no profession ever opened fairer fields for the exercise of all the essentials of character and ability than does the legal profession.

Preface

BY THOMAS (IJAMS) DENT

IVING a name to this book on its title-page, the publishers have intended to indicate that the work is biographical.

Treating, as it does, of members of the bench and bar at the date specified, it is expected to evoke attention from those who are interested in that line of literature, which in itself implies a degree of sociability, an awakening or revival of memories, a kindling of the affections, or an aid in the study of character, and is likewise promotive, in a measure, of further or better acquaintance. Printers and artists do much to enlarge the circle of acquaintance through books of this nature.

2. It is deemed appropriate, however, to notice briefly, in a somewhat bibliographical sense, three or four publications to which this book is in a measure akin; and they are to be so mentioned in the inverse order of the date of their publication, especially as the one which will be first named is perhaps the nearest in kinship to the present work.

(a) "The Bench and Bar of Illinois. Historical and Reminiscent. Edited by John M. Palmer, Chicago: The Lewis Pub. Co. 1899."

This is a work in two volumes, of which General John M. Palmer was editor. Its 1209 pages contain 66 chapters. There are in it something like 125 likenesses and upwards of 1000 biographical sketches or notices of persons. Eleven of the chapters treat chiefly of the courts and lawyers in Chicago. Various writers contributed to the work. Sometimes single counties are the subject of more than one chapter, and occasionally a number of the counties are grouped together in a narrative as to the bar and judges. It is a work of permanent interest and worthy of frequent consultation, not only as to the biographical points but also as to courts, both Territorial and State, and other matters of note.

The present writer contributed the ninth chapter of the work just mentioned; vol. 1, pages 141-151.

(b) "Reminiscences of the Early Bench and Bar of Illinois. By General Usher F. Linder. With an Introduction and Appendix by the Hon. Joseph Gillespie; Chicago: The Chicago Legal News Co. 1879."

The book just named is one of 406 pages. A short note by Judge James B. Bradwell explains that the author began writing the work (Reminiscences) in Dec., 1874, and completed it in March, 1876, and died June 5, 1876.

The introduction by Joseph Gillespie (pages 9-20), refers to the author as "a man of transcendent abilities in the forum and at the hustings," and as having "filled a large place in public estimation."

In the appendix (pp. 390-406), Judge Gillespie referred chiefly to four prominent lawyers, two of whom especially had been named in the earlier part of the book.

It is a posthumous work and needed some revision. For example: In the body of the work the name of Benjamin S. Edwards is given as Benjamin F. Edwards, though properly referred to in the table of contents, page 5.

The sketches, if that word may be used as to the dissertations in the book, are of men of marked prominence or distinction, some of whom resided in Kentucky in the author's youth and others of whom he became acquainted with in Illinois and Indiana after he removed to Illinois in 1835. While such notices, of which there are over 100 in the volume, treat mainly of judges and lawyers in Kentucky, Illinois and Indiana, and of some of the early governors of Illinois, a few other men of prominence are made the subject of reminiscent mention.

An eulogy of Joseph Gillespie by Gen. John M. Palmer was published in the Chicago Legal News, vol. 18, page 220. With that eulogy an estimate of General Linder by Hon. James C. Allen in the Year Book of the Illinois State Bar Association for 1904, part two, page 67, may be compared. That estimate accords him a high rank as an orator in Southern Illinois.

The military title of general was given him because of his having been Attorney General of Illinois. He and Abraham Lincoln were representatives in the General Assembly of Illinois in the Tenth General Assembly, 1836-1837, prior to his election as Attorney General. His book treats of a number of his fellow members of that assembly. He had, upon the whole, from his early residence in Kentucky, and his later residence in Charleston, Alton and Chicago, Illinois, respectively, good opportunity to know the men of whom his book treats; and the book itself, while in some respects peculiar, somewhat as its author himself was, seems to be entitled to a place as a biographical work, or perhaps as one of reminiscence, to be accredited to a keen observer of men.

The biographical feature brings the author especially into the foreground, and the men of whom he wrote were men of mark.

(c) Another work, which came out earlier than either of the two above mentioned, is entitled "The Chicago Bar. Illustrated by F. B. Wilkie, (Poliuto) Chicago: Published by the author, 1872."

The author, a bright newspaper reporter or writer and author, first published sketches in the Chicago Times prior to the great fire of Oct. 8 and 9, 1871. They were afterwards put in a pamphlet form. Finally in June, 1872, this book, including some matter not previously given, was published as a fourth edition. With its fine illustrations it is quite presentable.

It is a work of 128 pages and treats of a large number of the lawyers who were at the time in Chicago, and also makes reference to a number of distinguished men who resided in other places. It should be added, in a notice of the book, that it is attractive in its illustrations and narratives, and also that it is to be regretted that in a good many instances errors in dates, at times, and more in names, especially given names, but sometimes in surnames, were not corrected in printing.

3. As in imagining a tree of knowledge, it could be said that among its branches those known as biography and history will readily intertwine or combine; so we should say that readers wishing to learn of the participation of the lawyers of Illinois in public affairs or stations prior to 1889 would do well to have in hand or at command, not only Palmer's "Bench and Bar of Illinois," mentioned above, but the history which is entitled "Illinois: Historical and Statistical." By John Moses, ex-county judge of Scott County."

It is in two volumes and was published by the Fergus Printing Co., Chicago, and is highly commendable for the care which was bestowed upon it by its author.

A large store of information as to the periods covered will be found in the history by Judge Moses to which we have referred and in the work of Gen. Palmer above specified. They are good volumes to have at hand in tracing Illinois history for the periods covered by them.

It may also be said that the Illinois Blue Books which in recent times have been published under the direction of the Secretaries of State are calculated to keep inquirers posted as to who have been state officials or United States senators and representatives in Congress, and also as to various matters of interest to the public, as may be seen on examining, for example, the Blue Book for 1917-1918, edited by Louis L. Emmerson, Secretary of State.

The last mentioned work was intended in part to show the progress of the state during 100 years of statehood, and consequently the work tells a good deal of the period which has elapsed since the publication of the other books above mentioned.

As to a considerable number of the members of the bench and bar of Illinois who flourished in the past, the records of the various courts have memorials, and these are subject to inspection so far as such records have been preserved. Occasionally a record may have been lost, or as in the case of the great fire of Oct. 8 and 9, 1871, in Chicago, destroyed; and perhaps it would be commendable if through the bar associations in the state or otherwise some publication of lists of such memorials, or at times copies in full of some of them, should be supplied.

Another source of information in that regard is open to those who examine the reports of the Supreme and Appellate Courts. For in those reports a considerable number of memorials, especially of judges in the past, may be found. Yet with a considerable number of volumes of such reports to be examined—the number as to the Supreme Court in Illinois having run up, say, to 288 volumes, and that for the Appellate Courts being as many as 212—the task of finding the memorials, so far as they are not tabulated, is not slight, but on the contrary is so considerable as to make it desirable to have a table of the whole published. Under this head it may be said that in looking into the 251st volume of Illinois Reports, thirty-four of such memorials are tabulated as having been published in a number of the prior volumes, beginning with 4 Scammon, and including chiefly the names of justices of the Supreme Court, with those of two of the official reporters, and the names of a few lawyers of distinction who had not been on the bench in any of the state courts.

The suggestion of companionable qualities in the Illinois History by Moses with the more biographical work called "Palmer's Bench and Bar of Illinois," has its force because of both works going over much of the same ground as to time, speaking generally. But, of course, one using a book like the present one, of a strictly biographical bent or nature, might prefer to mate it with a later history of the state, such, for example, as the Centennial History of Illinois, three volumes of which, coming down to 1870, have been published.

4. While the compilers of the present work did not contemplate making it other than biographical, in a somewhat special form, yet when preparing to have the matter go to the press they concluded to have inserted some general notice of certain organizations in Illinois known as bar associations or bearing titles of a similar nature.

(a) The Chicago Bar Association is named first as standing in that order as to date of organization, such date being November, 1873. In March, 1874, it was incorporated under the statute as to corporations not for pecuniary profit. The organization came about in this way: The late William C. Goudy, of Chicago, was the moving projector. Starting out to get the signatures of forty of the lawyers in the city to call a meeting to organize, a list of whom he had probably selected or had specially in mind, he procured the signatures of that number or perhaps rather more. One of the names, that of the late Capt. William P. Black, was with Mr. Goudy's consent, given at the instance of the present writer, who suggested that it be so given with a view of relieving Mr. Goudy to some extent in the personal canvass which he was making for signatures. It is somewhat probable that a paper in 6, Chicago Legal News, page 242, has the names which were signed to the call, though not in the order of signing, so far as the writer remembers. At the first meeting thus brought about, Stephen A. Goodwin was chairman and A. M. Pence was secretary.

Through a committee then appointed, consisting of William C. Goudy, Lyman Trumbull, Thomas Hoyne, Robert Hervey and John S. Cooper, a meeting was called to organize the proposed association. A goodly number of the members of the Chicago bar attended the meeting so called, and the organization was in due form effected, and Mr. Goudy became the first president.

Persons interested in tracing the beginning of the association will find in 25, Chicago Legal News, page 123, some suggestions on the subject which were made by the late James L. High.

In the early years of the life of the association its annual and intermediate dinners, with speaking, of course, were marked features of its activities. Elections then and since have occurred annually, except in one or more changes to a later date for the time of election; and the result has been that forty-four persons have been chosen for the presidency. A note concerning the second annual dinner will give some idea as to the programs for the meetings. That dinner was held Dec. 30, 1875. Benjamin F. Ayer, the president, presided. Among the guests were John M. Scott, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois, R. E. Williams of the Bloomington bar, and E. W. Patterson of the St. Louis bar. The first toast had reference to the Supreme Court of the United States and was responded to by Hon. James R. Doolittle, Judge T. L. Dickey and Hon. John Dean Caton.

The second toast referred to the federal judiciary and was responded to by Judge E. S. Williams and Judge Henry W. Blodgett. The third toast referred to the legal fraternity, and to it responses were made by William H. Barnum, Prof. David Swing, chaplain of the meeting, R. E. Williams and Chief Justice Scott. A toast to "Our Clients" was responded to by D. L. Shorey, R. B. Roberts and John S. Cooper. There was also considerable other speaking before the meeting closed.

Some mention, incomplete as it must be, of what has been done by the association in the way of commemorating the lives of deceased members of the bench and bar, is desirable. However, before calling attention to the work in that line, attributable directly and specially to the association, meetings which were something like forerunners of what was afterwards done in respect to bar memorials as to deceased lawyers, are to be specified. Of these we notice: Sunday, Dec. 28, 1890, a memorial meeting was held in Recital Hall, Chicago, and an appropriate address was made by Luther Laflin Mills. That meeting was in memory of twenty-one members of the bar who had died in a little more than one year preceding that date.

Sunday, Dec. 27, 1891, a like meeting was held in the same place. John H. Hamline, president, presided; Rev. William White Wilson offered the invocation, and music was given by the choir of the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a memorial address was spoken by Judge George Driggs with reference to twenty-three members of the bar. Of memorial meetings, if any, held later up to 1895 the writer does not have items for a report.

The association caused to be prepared through the services of memorial committees, a number of memorial books and pamphlets in a handsome style of workmanship, such as those for 1895, 1896-1897, 1903-1904, 1904-1906 (the last one named including eight memorials belonging to 1900 and 1901), 1907-1909, 1909-1910, 1910-1911, 1911-1912, 1912-1913, all evidencing much care as to composition. In the volume for 1895 are sketches of Gen. I. N. Stiles, Judge John W. Gary, Judge Walter Q. Gresham, Judge John Dean Caton, S. Corning Judd and others. In the volume for 1896-1897 are sketches of James R. Doolittle, Lyman Trumbull and others. Each memorial volume is commendable.

In respect to the early memorial meetings specified, as also in early work of the Illinois State Bar Association, the late Charles C. Bonney was an active promoter. He was well qualified to be a leader in such matters.

Mention may be made of some dinners given by the Chicago Bar Association in the year ending Oct. 26, 1895. At one there was a discussion as to the Reform in pleading. At another the subject of special assessments was considered. At the third the Torrens Land Act, which was to be voted upon, was the topic dwelt upon. At another meeting John W. Showalter was the honor guest, he having become a United States District Judge for the Northern District of Illinois. Perhaps these meetings may with some propriety be considered typical of others held in previous years, and also of those of more recent years. At some such meetings there were good displays of oratory, and some of the younger men, such as Edward G. Mason, James S. Norton and I. K. Boyesen, when called out as speakers, would secure laurels.

The library of the association, now consisting of about 20,000 volumes, has been of great use to the bench and bar; and the association provides for the use of its members visiting the library room the leading law journals. The services of Carlos P. Sawyer as librarian continued for a long period, until on account of impaired health he resigned that office and was succeeded therein by John M. Cameron who, as did Mr. Sawyer, has the valued assistance of Clarence P. Denning.

The holding of bar primaries as to candidates for judicial positions to be filled by elections has for a number of years been a settled policy of the association, and in that connection pamphlets containing biographical sketches, usually with likenesses of candidates, have been issued for the information of members of the Association to aid in the choice of the candidates. The influence of such primaries has probably been greater when judicial elections have been held at times other than for the election of other officers generally, but always has been of much service to the public.

Special credit is due to the Association for the very important part it has taken, especially through its Grievance Committees and their attorney, in the investigation of charges brought to their notice, and in the prosecution of complaints against members of the bar in cases requiring discipline, or action for disbarment; and a considerable number of such cases have necessitated judicial action, resulting in suspension in some instances and in permanent disbarment in others.

Without enlarging upon the history of the association, it remains to be said that its founders and those who have wrought in sustaining the association are entitled to warm praise.

(b) The Illinois State Bar Association deserves a fuller notice than the space allowable here will permit. It was organized January 4, 1877, by a group of lawyers who met in Springfield and adopted a constitution for it which was somewhat amended on the eighth of that month, and which has since been amended in some particulars. It was originally a voluntary association, but, on the first of March, 1916, became incorporated under the act concerning corporations which was approved April 18, 1872.

The first president was Anthony Thornton, of Shelbyville. He had previously held a variety of offices. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847 which framed the State Constitution of 1848; a member of the Seventeenth General Assembly, 1850-52; a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, the work of which was submitted to a vote of the electors in the time of the civil war, but was not approved by them; and also a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, 1863-65, and a justice of the Illinois Supreme Court, 1870-73, from which last named office he resigned May 31, 1873. Others of his fellow members who began the work of the association were well adapted to insure success in the enterprise. In this particular we have but to mention a few of them; for example: William L. Gross and James H. Matheny of Springfield, James B. Bradwell and Elijah B. Sherman of Chicago and S. D. Puterbaugh and David McCulloch of Peoria, as samples of the organizers.

The object of the association, as its constitution declared, was, "to cultivate the science of jurisprudence, to promote reform in the law, to facilitate the administration of justice, to elevate the standard of integrity, honor and courtesy in the legal profession, to encourage a thorough and liberal legal education, and to cherish a spirit of brotherhood among the members thereof."

A pamphlet which was published by William L. Gross, secretary of the association, about July 1, 1877, enables us to be somewhat more specific in respect to the organization of the association. Such pamphlet shows that the convention held in Springfield, January 4, 1877, was attended by representatives of the bar of thirty-seven counties in the state. Of those representatives, five were from Cook County, four were from Hancock County, nine were from McLean County, five were from Morgan County, five were from Peoria County, nine were from Sangamon County, five were from Vermilion County. The attendance of representatives of the others of the thirty-seven counties averaged from one to three in number, the aggregate number of representatives being eighty-eight, as given by this pamphlet, though a later account, of which mention is to be made herein, made the number eighty-six.

Anthony Thornton was chosen as president of the convention, and Oscar F. Price of Galesburg acted as secretary. Upon the adoption of the constitution, officers were chosen, a vice president of the association was chosen for each of the seven Judicial Districts of the Supreme Court of the State; William L. Gross of Springfield was named as recording and corresponding secretary; Milton Hay of Springfield became treasurer; the Executive Committee of seven members represented the seven Supreme Court Judicial Districts; twenty-nine members, twenty-six of them representing twenty-six circuits, and three representing Cook County, were named as a Committee of Grievances, and a like number as to the circuits, with five members for Cook County, composed a Committee on Law Reform, and, besides these committees, there was a committee of seven on Legal Education and a committee of five on "Publication of Illinois Reports."

At the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the association which was held in Chicago, July 12, 1900, one of the subjects on the program was, "The Founders of the Association," and the manner in which the topic was handled may be seen by consulting the year book for that year, pages 58 to 73. At page 62, Judge Bradwell mentioned the initial steps which brought about the meeting for the founding of the association, and referred to passages in the Chicago Legal News through which the call to form such an association was made. He gave special credit to Stephen R. Moore of Kankakee as a prime mover in the matter. Eighty-six names were read as being those of charter members (pages 58 to 60). Of those, it was said, thirty-one, whose names are stated (page 61), remained members. Of the thirty-one, only four are supposed by the writer to be living; such four being: I. N. Bassett, Stephen R. Moore, James M. Riggs and George W. Wall, three of these being on the roll of members.

Judge Thornton continued to be president until January 8, 1880, at which time, during the third annual meeting of the association, David McCulloch, of Peoria, was elected to succeed him. In the index to the Year Book for 1911, at page 523, reference is made to the president's first annual address, which was by Judge Thornton in 1878 as having been on the subject of "Law and Lawyers," and reference is made also to an address by him in 1884 on "The Life of C. B. Lawrence."

The report of the proceedings of the Third Annual Meeting, on January 8, 1880, as prepared by William L. Gross, secretary, is a pamphlet of sixty-three pages. It gives the Annual Address, which was on the subject of "The Scientific or Model Lawyer," and was by General John A. McClelland, and was, as a resolution of the association states, "able, learned and eloquent." A special address, which also was good, was by Hon. James M. Riggs. His subject was, "The Line of Demarkation Between the Powers of the State and the Federal Judiciary." The banquet in the evening was evidently very interesting, judging by the subjects of the toasts and the responses thereto, which were made by the following speakers: Francis H. Kales of Chicago, as to the "Supreme Court of Illinois"; S. W. Moulton of Shelbyville, as to "The Appellate Courts of Illinois"; E. Callahan of Robinson, as to "Our Clients"; Rev. W. S. Prentice of Springfield, as to "The Clergy"; T. L. Dickey as to "Olden Times on the Circuit"; C. W. Thomas of Belleville as to "Thou Best of Fees, Fe-male"; John H. Oberly as to "The Press"; General John C. Black as to "Our Brothers Departed." Such responses are given in the pamphlet except those by Judge T. L. Dickey and General John C. Black, and these are very highly praised. Some of the toasts are stated above in an abbreviated form.

The pamphlet, at pages 62 and 63, gives a very interesting letter from Judge William Thomas of Jacksonville as to lawyers of his acquaintance in what was the first circuit in Illinois, especially in 1826 and 1827. The circuit embraced nine counties, including Morgan, Sangamon, Peoria, Fulton, Adams and Pike as a part of the circuit.

The constitution of the association, as it stood in 1880, provided for a committee on legal biography, which was to be appointed yearly, that the association might have suitable memorials of the lives of deceased members of the bar of the state. Such committee for that year was composed of John M. Palmer and Alfred Orendorff of Springfield and Charles C. Bonney of Chicago, and its report at the meeting in January, 1880, noted the death of N. M. Knapp of Winchester and A. J. Gallagher of Decatur. In 1895 the constitution and by-laws were so amended as to provide for the appointment of a necrologist. Judge James B. Bradwell, an ex-president of the association, became the necrologist, and so acted for many years. His last report is in the year book for 1903. It made note of deaths up to about July 1, 1903. He continued to note the deaths quite generally of members of the bar of the state; and he kept additionally "Obituary Memoranda" in books in which printed or written notices could be placed, but after 1903 until his death, Dec. 1, 1907, ill health prevented him from making reports.

The name of the late James H. Matheny of Springfield is on the roll of membership in 1877 as James H. Matheny, Jr. He succeeded Judge William L. Gross as secretary, and after some years became president. He continued to exhibit a warm interest in the association during his lifetime and was highly useful in service.

It has happened that the Illinois State Bar Association has had nearly as many presidents as the Chicago Bar Association, as Frederick A. Brown of Chicago, now president of the State Bar Association, is the forty-first in number. Judge Thornton's term was longer than that of other presidents, and, as Orville H. Browning died while president, he was succeeded by Elijah B. Sherman, then vice president.

As the year books of the association issued in 1904-07 did not give memorial sketches as had been usual in prior volumes, resort was had to the "Obituary Memoranda" books above mentioned in making up a considerable number of such sketches which will be found in the necrologist's reports and sketches in the years 1908 and 1909; a part of such sketches intended for the earlier of these volumes having, for lack of space in that volume, found a place in the later of the two volumes.

Aside from the biographical matter supplied by the necrologist and published in the year books, various biographical memorials which are fuller or more extended, are to be found by consulting different volumes. Of these memorials a few may be readily mentioned: such, for example, as "An Address by Melville W. Fuller on the Life of Sidney Breese," volume for 1879, page 31; Memorial as to the Life of Lyman Trumbull, volume for 1904, page 71 of part 2; Address by E. P. Williams as to Charles B. Lawrence, volume for 1905, page 66 of part 2; Memorial of John N. Jewett by E. B. McCagg, in the same volume, page 88 of part 2.

In various important matters of public interest the association has had a good influence. One of the matters was the abolition in 1897 of the Three Grand Divisions of the State in respect to the holding of the Supreme Court, and fixing upon Springfield as the place for its sessions.

At many of the annual meetings prominent lawyers from other states and countries, some of them much experienced as judges, have been in attendance, and addresses by them on such occasions and at the banquets are to be found in the year books, and contribute to making those books interesting. As one example in this line, the year book for 1918 shows an address by Sir Frederick Edwin Smith, Attorney General of England, in which that gentleman treated in a somewhat general way of the great war that was then raging, and, in concluding, felicitously urged that there should be devised a better method than war to settle international differences. Doubtless, he favored the formation of a league of nations.

A later part of the same volume gives an account of local bar associations formed in the seven Supreme Court Districts of Illinois. Some of these are referred to as intended to cultivate closer relations between the various county and city bar associations in each of such districts. (See pages 420-464.) With the account are likenesses of four of the officers of each of the seven district associations.

The Illinois State Bar Association was, as we have seen, later in its organization than the Chicago Bar Association; and it is understood that the State Bar Association in New York was preceded by that of New York City; and also that the American Bar Association was, in a measure, an offshoot (according to a suggestion of Judge Simeon E. Baldwin of Connecticut, one of its early projectors,) of a bar association in the State of Connecticut. While the greater part of the manuscript of this paper was in the hands of the writer the Bar Association of New York City celebrated its semi-centennial. It has done much good work.

Such associations are entitled to high credit as supplying a need in advancing education, improvement in legislation and practice, and in general promoting the public welfare.

(c) The Lawyers Association of Illinois has its home, or central location, in Chicago. It was incorporated about fifteen years ago and is understood to have a membership of about one thousand persons. The objects of the corporation are, "To protect and promote the rights, interest and welfare of its members and of the legal profession; to secure concerted and effective action for the repeal of inequitable laws and enactment of just laws; to secure the expeditious, impartial and efficient administration of justice; to maintain and foster the honor and dignity of the profession of law; to encourage and cultivate social and educational intercourse among lawyers; to discuss such subjects as pertain to the objects of the association and such other matters as may be deemed proper, and to acquire and hold property, real and personal, for the uses and purposes of the association."

It has a full board of directors and various committees, under such heads as to the committees, as membership, judiciary, legislation, public service, memorial, education and library, press and grievance. A large number of leading and active lawyers constitute the official boards and the committees. The association is credited with bringing about the enactment of the Attorneys' Lien Law in 1909, and it has taken an active part in legislative matters since its organization. It is understood that its meetings are held about once a month on an average.

(d) The women who have entered the legal profession are not slow to appreciate the value of bar associations. As evidence of this, we observe that the Women's Bar Association of Illinois held its annual banquet February 12, 1920, in Chicago, at which banquet there was a program of addresses by Frederick A. Brown, president of the Illinois State Bar Association, Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas, and a number of women from Illinois and New York.

5. IN CONCLUSION:

We are in an age calling for application and activity which should result in progress, and it is to be hoped this will be for right living and a better brotherhood of nations; and the bench and bar should dutifully join, or perhaps we should say continue, in the forward march, as an important part of the vanguard.

The saying that "unto whom much is given, of him much shall be required," is still to be borne in mind as having divine authority.

THOMAS (IJAMS) DENT.
